Donna Flagg, President, The Krysalis Group

Donna Flagg is the founder of The Krysalis Group, a company formed in 2001 that specializes in organizational and brand development and their respective relationships to business results. Among the workplace improvement services that the firm offers is one that focuses on teaching companies how to produce training programs that accommodate the needs of people with learning disabilities so that all employees have an equal chance to participate in learning. After earning a BA from Rutgers University and spending more than fifteen years on the front lines of corporate America, Donna went on to attend New York University's Graduate School of Education where she obtained a Masters Degree in Organizational Development and Human Resource Management, and a post graduate degree in Business Education.

Donna started her management career in sales at CHANEL, and before branching out on her own to launch Krysalis, she spearheaded a new training function within the Investment Banking Division at Goldman Sachs. In addition to both running Krysalis on a daily basis and directing its strategic vision, Donna has been a visiting instructor and panelist at New York University through Delta Phi Epsilon, a national honorary professional graduate society in business education and training. She currently blogs for Reed Business on Expertbusinesssource.com and is frequently quoted in the press for her working expertise. In 2004, Donna was the back page columnist for Empire Magazine.
